Abstract. This study aims to analyze the working of two democratic traditions in the election of head of Neglasari Village in 2015. This aim based on the condition of Neglasari as a unity of law society that has its own tradition in implementing democracy. However, the state determines that liberal democratic tradition is the main traditions that applied in head of village election. The research uses qualitative research and case study as its research strategy. Data collecting is done by interview, observation and documentation. The working of both democratic traditions turns out to provide a positive contribution, to the village democracy to be more qualified because both traditions are supporting each other.

Keywords: tradition of democracy, chief of village election, local leadership (sesepuh)

Introduction

A village is a unity of law society that exists long before the existence of a state. Although the government of Dutch East Indies found it in 1817 (Kartohadikoesoemo, 1984), its existence was long before at least during the era of the Singhasari Kingdom established in 1222-1292 and it was known as desa perdikan (Maschab, 2013). It means that village has a long history and continues in a dynamic along with the development of the kingdom that copes it until its current form.

The condition, however, did not mean that the power and existence of a village is higher than that of the state. The substantial power of the state is the main causing factor of the condition. With its power, a state has the authority to set the direction of development, form and pattern of the governance and the development of a village including in the election of its head of village. In other words, a village depends on more to the good will and political will of the state.

At present, the regulation on village is set by Act No. 6, 2014 on village. The act states that head of village is directly elected by its people and the election is conducted simultaneously. The regulation of the simultaneous election is a new thing in the election of head of village for all unity of law societies in Indonesia including Neglasari Village in Salawu Sub-district, Tasikmalaya Regency, West Java. The most important thing in this election of head of village, however, is not its simultaneous nature but the regulation in the act to maintain the implementation of the mechanism of direct election of head of village by its people. The mechanism is part of liberal democratic tradition to elect the leader.

The problem is that although Neglasari Village is not a unity of customary law society, it has its own tradition in the election of the head of village. The tradition came from the custom of Kampung Naga society who still exist and effectively to be the guidance for people of Neglasari in their social life, governing and democracy. Kampung Naga itself is one of kampongs in the area of Neglasari Village. According to Ningrum (2012), for Naga people, custom has a unifying force (centripetal) that could weaken the external strengths that have split force (centrifugal). This Naga custom is summarized in four traditions: will, mandates, prohibitions and consequences.

Although it is different from New Order Era, the tradition is still effective in electing
