ABSTRACT

DWI ADYA RAHMI 190110130077 Descriptive study of the Fulfillment Families' Developmental Tasks in the stage of Families with young children, Focusing on the commuter marriage's wives that fall into the adjusting couple type

Commuter marriage is a condition within a marriage relationship where there is a husband-wife that desire to stay in their marriage yet to choose their career opportunity voluntarily. In marriage, there are developmental tasks that are needed to be completed by both spouses. This study aims to describe the fulfillment of the families' developmental tasks in the stage of families with young children, focusing on the commuter marriage's wives that fall into the adjusting couple type. Adjusting couple is a couple who have 0-5 years of marriage-aged that with or without toddlers or children.

This research used quantitative descriptive method. The samples are 39 wives in a commuter marriage. The sampling technique is purposive sampling. Measuring instrument that is used in this research is a questionnaire from the concept of families' developmental tasks in the stage of families with young children taken from Goldrick (2014).

Study shows all respondents have fulfilled families' developmental tasks in families with young children. Ninety-seven percent of respondents have no obstacles in completing the task of adjusting couple system to make space of children. Couples who have an income and live in their own houses are able to complete the said task. All respondents are also able to perform the collaborating in child-rearing, financial and housekeeping task by having discussions with their spouses. Sixty-two percent of respondents have completed the task of realignment of relationship with extended family to include parenting and grand parenting through engaging their children in routine activities with other relatives. Ninety percent of respondents have completed the task of realignment of relationship with community and large social system to include new family structure and relationship through taking their children to stroll around the neighborhood when their husbands are home.
